Part 6 - Hey, "Ag"... what's your pension plan?

In this series, professionals debate the state – and future – of their industry. Read all the posts here and write your own (use #MyIndustry in the body of your post).

"If the global food & agriculture industry were a person, what are (or should be) his/her pension plans".

This series is about exploring the current situation of the global agri-food sector in the context of looming crises at large. The idea is similar to anyone investing in a pension plan to secure his/her future but the question is whether the ag-food industry is doing it or not as the number of mouths to be fed grows to 9 billion by 2050 and an increase of at least 60-70% is needed in food production.

Ever since I started writing this series, I have been learning so many interesting things that I am sharing, to the extent possible, in an easy to understand manner.

True Dave. Every industry including finance, IT and others are openly discussing about attracting and retaining best talent. But unfortunately the most important industry to feed the world is rather oblivious to the challenge. More so in Asia.

Good series of articles. Given all the overlapping trends and changes, agricultural science will require the smartest people in order to 'properly' feed the world's population. Yes, we can feed the world, but at what cost?
