GFRAS Strategic Framework 2016 – 2025

GFRAS began operations in 2010. It evolved out of a series of discussions at the European Regional Conference on Rural Advisory Services in October 2010 in Abidjan, Ivory Coast. The Conference provided a platform through which a discussion took place on different issues such as Access to Markets and Producer Linkages, Research, Education and Training, and the Role of Young Farmers. The discussion resulted in the formation of an initial GFRAS forum in September 2011.

The initial strategic framework ended in 2015, so a new strategic framework has been developed. The new framework aims to provide guidance for the development and implementation of extension policies, while the majority of the core processes remain the same.

The goal of the GFRAS Operational Plan is to ensure that extension policies are in place in all countries. It is hoped that the new framework will help to achieve this goal.

The five-year operational plan concretises the goals formulated in the strategic framework. This plan is designed to ensure that the GFRAS goals are achieved.

At the core of the first East Africa policy and training meeting, extension policies, while the majority of the core processes remain the same.

Despite a wide range of approaches to extension policies, there is a need for some integration and duplication has started to emerge. Therefore, an e-discussion on Capacity Development as well as strategic framework F1: Innovation and Networking and consultation between stakeholders in rural advisory services will become more.

The New Extensionist Learning Kit is a learning resource for individual extension field staff, managers, and lecturers. It contains a wealth of information on functional skills and will be available for self-directed, face-to-face, or blended learning towards the end of 2016.

An online consultation and discussion on Building of Public Extension Policies with a Territorial Focus to Strengthen the Agricultural Innovation System will be held.

The Compendium provides background information, inputs, ideas, and hands-on guidance for decision-making and facilitation of successful policy processes for RAS.

The European Regional Network of Agricultural and Rural Services (RELASER) and the Ministry of Agriculture in Georgia are looking to improve their rural advisory services system. The Georgia Rural Advisory Services System (GRASS) project is aiming to strengthen the system, and the project is working towards the goal of improving the system through a variety of initiatives.

The Project 2020 targets young people and rural communities. It is seeking to improve the lives of young people and rural communities through a variety of initiatives.

There is plenty of information available, but it is often scattered and presented in complex ways. It can be difficult to find the information that is needed, and it can be difficult to make use of this information.

The New Extensionist Learning Kit is designed to provide a comprehensive learning resource that is easy to use. It contains a wealth of information on functional skills and is designed to be available for self-directed, face-to-face, or blended learning.

The Kit is available online, and it is designed to be user-friendly. It is hoped that the Kit will help to improve the lives of young people and rural communities through the provision of useful information.
